

I have been a sonic.net customer since 1994 or so, and I do not want to see them forced out of business by BellSouth or other giants. Sonic.net helped create the internet; they should not now be forced out by larger players, especially when those larger players do not have the time nor interest to pay attention to individual customers. In particular, I see no reason why the FCC should stop regulating broadband service.